PREFACE

Historians have long appreciated the uses of both the enrolled and particular accounts left by the medieval English customs system. The enrolled accounts run almost unbroken from 1275 and provide an invaluable index to the main trends in England's trade as it becomes visible through taxation. They give totals of the exports of wool, woolfells, hides, and cloth, and of the imports of wine, all these being goods taxed by the piece. They also give some indication of the level of other trade by providing totals of duties charged ad valorem, as well as some indication of the nationalities carrying the trade, at least within the broad categories of denizens, aliens and Hansards, each of whom paid duties at different levels.¹ However the enrolled accounts provide little else about the details of the trade, and the local returns from the ports (the particular accounts, on which the enrolled accounts are based) are therefore vital for information on merchants, shipping, the direction of trade, and the tremendous variety of goods exchanged. Although they have not survived as fully as the enrolled accounts, there are enough of them for each major port to enhance knowledge about its commercial community beyond measure. All modern detailed examinations of ports or branches of trade accordingly make full use of them.² They undoubtedly deserve to be published in larger numbers than has yet been the case.³

The particular accounts for Hull survive in scattered numbers throughout the later middle ages. Although a few isolated examples have already been published,⁴ a consecutive series is necessary for any extended analysis of trade. There are three periods of time for which a sufficient number survive to make this possible: 1275-1325; 1378-1401; 1453-1490. The accounts in the earliest of these periods have the advantage of recording Hull's trade

¹ Wool and cloth totals have been tabulated by E. M. Carus-Wilson and O. Coleman, England's Export Trade 1275-1547 (Oxford, 1963); wine figures have been published by M. K. James, Studies in the Medieval Wine Trade, ed. E. M. Veale (Oxford, 1971) pp. 32-6, 55-9, 94-118; petty custom and poundage totals for 1399-1482 are listed in E. Power and M. M. B. Quinn and A. A. Ruddock, The Port Books or Local Customs Accounts of Southampton for the Reign of Edward IV, 2 vols. Southampton Record Society, 37-38 (1937-38) pp. 200-22. Recently the accounts for 1322-3 and 1464-5 for King's Lynn have been published in D. M. Owen (ed.), The Making of King's Lynn (London, 1984), nos. 404-8, 410.

⁴ The earliest Hull account, for wool exports 1275-6, was published by Gras, op. cit., pp. 224-44; the tunnage and poundage account for 1401 (wrongly dated 1400) was published by C. Frost, Notices relative to the early history of the town and port of Kingston-upon-Hull (Hull, 1827) Appendix, pp. 1-27; details of cloth exports were extracted from a range of Hull accounts and published by J. when its woollen exports were at their peak, but the duties charged at that time were levied only on wool, woolfells and hides exported and (from 1303) on alien trade, and thus these accounts provide only a partial picture of Hull's commercial activity. The accounts for the second period provide a fuller picture as duties had by then been extended (with the cloth custom of 1347 and the increasing use of tunnage and poundage subsidies) to all merchants for all goods, but unfortunately some of these accounts are in very poor condition. The accounts in the third period offer the double advantage of surveying all merchants and goods while surviving in reasonable numbers and in good repair. It is accordingly these which have been chosen for this edition. True, Hull's trade had by then passed its medieval apogee, but the later fifteenth century is a time of considerable commercial interest, when England's trade was changing gear both nationally and regionally. Wool had given way to cloth as a major export; the mid-fifteenth century slump was giving way to revival; and London was expanding at the expense of provincial ports. The current controversy over the extent of urban decay or prosperity for both inland and coastal towns in this period is also illuminated by these accounts: they provide additional original material to amplify an analysis of Hull's commercial position and of how her mercantile community was coping with the economic pressures of the later middle ages.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to thank my colleagues at the University of Leeds, in the Schools of History and English and in the Department of German, for their help in identifying the more obscure places and commodities. I am grateful too to Mr Terry Lloyd of the University of Swansea for his comments on the wool account of 1489-90. I am also indebted to Professor Barrie Dobson for his advice on the introduction and the editing of the text. What shortcomings remain in the text are my own responsibility, but they would undoubtedly have been greater without such help.

The documents recorded here are all the particulars of accounts of both collectors and controllers of customs known to me which survive from the period 1450 to 1500 for Hull. The documents (E122/61/71; 234/9(2); 61/74-5; 62/1-20; 63/1-2, 8) are Crown copyright records held in the Public Record Office at Chancery Lane. The transcripts and the frontispiece appear with the permission of the Controller of Her Majesty's Stationery Office.

The editor of this volume and the officers of the Yorkshire Archaeological Society would like to express their appreciation to the City Council of Kingston upon Hull and to the Twenty-Seven Foundation for their financial support towards the publication costs of this edition. They are also pleased to acknowledge a generous grant from the Trustees of the Elisabeth Exwood Memorial Trust.

INTRODUCTION

Historians use English customs accounts widely and without apology. However the accounts have come in for considerable criticism, and it is as well to bear in mind the problems they pose as well as the information they give. This introduction is therefore devoted to an examination of the nature of the documents rather than to providing a survey of Hull's trade based on them. The first, more general, section examines what the accounts were meant to record and whether in fact they did so reliably and accurately; and the second part makes some assessment of the information they provide with reference to Hull.

I The English customs system in the fifteenth century

The imposition of national customs duties and the setting up of a system to administer them had developed piecemeal from the late thirteenth century; by the fifteenth century it had settled into a well-established and fairly uniform pattern for all England.¹ The system was meant by then to tax all overseas trade by all merchants along the whole of the English coastline. Special arrangements were sometimes made for Cornwall, Wales, and the North-West; and wool from the northern counties might be exported from Berwick without going through the Staple at Calais.² Otherwise it was illegal to trade abroad except through the fifteen designated headports and their creeks if these were open.

The duties fell on trade with all overseas areas, including Ireland, the Channel Islands and Gascony, even though these were English possessions; but they did not fall on coasting trade between English ports, which was liable to local duties only. The national accounts do not therefore give a full picture of any port's total maritime trade, but they should do so of all its overseas business.

By the fifteenth century all commodities, imported and exported, of all merchants, alien and denizen, were taxed under one or more of the separate duties payable: the old or great custom of 1275 on wool, woolfells and hides exported, which was later supplemented by subsidies on these goods; the new or petty custom of 1303 on all alien goods both imported and exported; the cloth custom of 1347 payable by denizens and aliens (except Hansards); and the subsidy of tunnage and poundage imposed from 1347, at first intermittently and then permanently, payable by all merchants (again except the Hansards) on all goods except exports of wool, woolfells and hides and (later) denizen cloth. The rates payable had become standard by the second half of the fifteenth century. For every sack of wool merchants paid 6s. 8d. old custom of 1275 and 33s. 4d. subsidy, totalling 40s. a sack (except between 1453 and 1464, when the subsidy was raised to 43s. 4d., making a total of 50s.). Aliens paid an extra 3s. 4d. under the terms of the Carta Mercatoria of 1303. For woollfells merchants paid at the same rates, at a reckoning of 240 fells to the sack. For each cloth without grain Hansards paid 12d. (petty custom of 1303 only), denizens paid 14d. (1347 cloth duty only), and aliens paid 2s. 9d. (the 12d. petty custom of 1303 and the alien rate of 1s. 9d. imposed in 1347). Aliens also paid poundage on the value of their cloths, but Hansards were usually exempted under the terms of their charter of privileges, and denizens were regularly exempted, at first by ad hoc letters to the collectors and then by the terms of the parliamentary grants of poundage. Aliens and denizens paid the same tunnage on wines, set at 3s. the tun for non-sweet wine and 6s. for sweet. Rhenish wine was sometimes valued and paid petty custom and poundage on the value, but was sometimes converted to pipes and hogsheads for payment of tunnage (The account for Hull for 1471-2, no. 22 below, shows the collectors uncertainty as to which method to use.) For all goods paying ad valorem Hansards paid 3d. in the £ (petty custom of 1303 only; they were usually exempt from poundage under the terms of their charter); denizens paid 12d. in the £ (poundage only, set at this rate throughout the later fifteenth century); and aliens paid 15d. in the £ (both petty custom and poundage) unless they had temporary exemptions.

The only goods totally exempted were the personal effects of seamen, merchants and passengers, the king's own goods, and victuals for Calais. There were few exemptions for particular individuals or groups and none of these was entire or permanent: collectors therefore still recorded such goods with an explanation of why the merchants were not currently paying normal duties. The major exemption was of Hansard merchants from both the cloth custom of 1347 and tunnage and poundage: they had refused to pay these on the grounds that their royal charter of 1285 exempted them from taxes imposed in the future. This claim was usually recognised by the Crown, but since the Hansards paid the taxes of 1275 and the negotiated tax of 1303 all their trade nevertheless fell under the eyes of the collectors. Other exemptions were similarly partial and often short-lived: in the fifteenth century the Spaniards were allowed to trade as denizens under the terms of the Anglo-Castilian treaty of 1466-89; and men of Veere from 1471, men of Westenschouwen and Haamstede from 1473, and men of Malines from 1478 were allowed to trade as if they were Hansards. Some groups of traders were allowed to keep all or part of their duties themselves: the Staplers did so under various agreements as repayments of loans they made the Crown; the mayor and burgesses of Hull were allowed to keep £40 a year for ten years from 1463 and £60 a year for twenty years from 1484. Most of these grants lapsed under Henry VII, but while they were in force it was still necessary for the collectors to take a proportion of the duties or record precisely by how much a grantee had so far benefited. In no cases therefore should these exemptions have led to the omission of the merchants from the accounts as a whole.³

By the fifteenth century the system for collection, like the duties themselves, had settled into a well-known routine. Each provincial port had two local men appointed as its collectors, usually for all customs duties together. They recorded the amount, value and ownership of all consignments through the port and gave the merchants or their factors a receipt, or cocket, for the duty paid: these would then be shown to the searcher before unloading or sailing. At the end of the financial year (at Michaelmas or before if the officials were changed in mid-term) the collectors drew up a full and detailed account of the duty collected, ship by ship and merchant by merchant, probably compiled from files of copies of the cockets. The accounts were not prepared to a precise standard formula: they might be on parchment or occasionally on paper, in a ledger or a roll, and if in a roll then sewn either Exchequer or Chancery style. All the exits might be arranged chronologically followed by all the entries, or both categories might be mixed together in one chronological list. Entries might be divided into two sections before and after Easter; they might note destinations and last ports of call; they sometimes provided very full shipping information but often only the masters' names. They all however recorded what the Exchequer saw as essential — the ownership, amount, value and duty payable on the commodities.

These detailed accounts, after completion at the ports, were taken to the Exchequer in neatly labelled white leather pouches, together with a summary account of the total duty, a list of expenses and allowances claimed, and any additional documentation such as tallies, receipts, and certificates of membership of the Steelyard for German merchants.

Alongside the customs collectors worked the controller. He was a royal agent, often a king's clerk and meant to be from outside the area of the port in question. He kept the other half of the cocket seal so that no receipts should be given without his knowledge. He was expected to be resident in the port and to write his rolls in his own hand, unlike the collectors who had the free use of clerks. His independent roll was also sent up to the Exchequer.

At the Exchequer the auditors, working in pairs, examined the two rolls together, noting at the end that this had been done (examinantur cum rotulis . . . contrarotulatoris, or collectorum). They made note of mistakes and omissions and in cases which seemed to indicate fraud or negligence they took steps to prosecute. Thus in 1474 the collectors of Hull were called to explain why 60 tuns of wine exported from Hull on a Breton ship in 1473 appeared in the controller's roll and not theirs. They were able to prove that this was the remains of a cargo of 66 tuns, brought in and duly recorded in their roll, which the owner had been unable to sell. They had, quite properly, licensed him to re-export it to Newcastle without further payments, and the king's attorney accordingly dropped the case against them.⁴ The receipts and tallies sent in to the Exchequer would be checked against the receipt and issue rolls there. Finally, if all was in order and accepted, the Exchequer clerks entered up the summary total provided by the collectors on the enrolled customs accounts, giving both the amounts collected and disbursed and noting whether the account balanced. Arrears were transferred to the Pipe Roll. The particular accounts then lost much of their use, although they were kept for a while in case simple checking of facts should make further scrutiny necessary.⁵ Their survival rate is consequently poor compared with that of the enrolled accounts which survive almost unbroken from their inception. The ancillary cockets, receipts, summary views, Hanse certificates and suchlike documents similarly soon lost their value and survive even less plentifully.⁶

³ Difficulties may occur however when petty custom and tunnage and poundage accounts were kept separately, as they often were in the fourteenth century when the subsidies were temporary, and as they always were in London because of the size of its trade. The non-survival of one of these two categories of accounts will leave an incomplete picture, with the English trade missing from the petty custom account and the Hansard trade from the tunnage and poundage account. Fortunately, this problem occurred only rarely in Hull in the fifteenth century; see below p. xviii.

An additional check on the collectors and controller was provided by the searcher, originally appointed in 1299 to search for illegally exported bullion. By the fifteenth century his powers had been extended to search for all smuggled goods, but his accounts cover only the goods he arrested and do not in any way duplicate the collectors' and controllers' accounts. Yet another supervisor of all these officials was the rather obscure surveyor of search or surveyor of customs, referred to occasionally in the fourteenth and more frequently in the fifteenth century. In the sixteenth century his was a permanent office supervising both searchers and collectors.⁷

The care with which the collection of customs was supervised is unsurprising given the value of the customs and subsidies to the Crown. The institution of wool customs in 1275 had immediately added some £10,000 to the king's regular income; and the duties of 1303 and 1347 and above all the wool subsidies of Edward III had meant that another £40,000 to £60,000 then became available to the Crown in the mid-fourteenth century. Even when English wool exports had plummeted to the low levels of the 1470s, Edward IV still received some £34,000 a year from customs and subsidies, making up half his regular income.⁸

Despite intense governmental regulation of procedure the reliability of the customs accounts has often been severely criticised. Such criticism falls into three main categories: first, that the accounts were not trade but tax records; secondly, that there are cases of serious discrepancy; and, thirdly, that smuggling, evasion and negligence invalidate their accuracy.

The first and most general criticism has some point. The collectors were

⁶ Some of these categories of documents survive for Hull in our period; see for example below, nos. 8, 12.

⁷ Gras, Customs System, pp. 98–9; C. Ross, Edward IV (1974), p. 384.

⁸ Ross, op. cit., pp. 371–3, 384–7.

not concerned with the direction or balance of trade nor with how the cloth industry was faring, they simply collected duties. However, provided that the reader understands precisely what the duties were and what can be expected to be recorded and interprets the accounts accordingly, they yield information totally unavailable elsewhere. The second criticism can be dismissed more quickly. Doubts here have been raised by Professor Verlinden and M. Craeybeckx primarily because of apparent discrepancies in the wine records. They claimed, among other matters, that the total annual wine imports to England as listed on the enrolled accounts in the fifteenth century were less than the imports for Hull alone. However, as Professor Carus-Wilson showed, this criticism was based on a nineteenth-century misreading of a ledger in the British Library which is not (as it was taken to be) a list of ships bringing imports to Hull in 1444-5 but the ledger of Edward Hull recording the total wine exports from Bordeaux.⁹

Questions have also been raised about inconsistencies between national and local customs accounts when both survive for the same period; but in fact neither can prove the accuracy or inaccuracy of the other. The local customs accounts include coasting trade so should have more ships and shipments, yet they also allow more exemptions which are accordingly not always recorded. There are thus bound to be discrepancies, perhaps very marked ones; and comparisons between the two types of account at Exeter and Southampton indicate that the national customs records often offer more information and certainly mention more foreign trade than do the local ones.¹⁰

The third criticism is the most troublesome as the levels of official negligence or corruption as well as of evasion and smuggling are impossible to establish. Obviously all these factors occurred; and the government was aware of these problems and tried to safeguard against them. The administration itself had checks built into it, with its collectors, controllers, and searchers; a myriad of other officials, pesagers, tronagers, gaugers, deputy butlers on or near the quay might also protect the king's interests. General inquisitions were conducted if serious suspicions were aroused, as in Yorkshire in 1416, but others took place as part of the justices' general duties.¹¹ Legislation was sometimes passed to stop loopholes (as when made-up garments of scarlet cloth were put under the cloth custom) and also to encourage informers and deter offenders. Informers were offered inducements of as much as a third to a half of the fines levied on offenders: these would bring them substantial sums as penalties were heavy. Smugglers had to pay double the duty evaded and later had to forfeit their goods altogether. Dishonest officials were forced entirely into the king's mercy. Collectors themselves were not allowed to trade while in office and were fined £40 for each offence if they did so. They could be fined £11 for failing to give cockets; and selling blank cockets was a felony leading to forfeiture of all chattels and three years' imprisonment. Concealment of customs once they had been collected was punished by a penalty of three times the value of the goods chargeable, not just three times the duties concealed.¹² Even a small offence would entirely wipe out the collector's annual fee of £10.

Nevertheless corruption, evasion, and smuggling did continue, as the steady stream of prosecutions on the Memoranda Rolls shows. The problem comes in assessing the scale of these offences. Certainly some cases were major ones. William de la Pole was alleged to have arranged the export of 2,500 sacks of wool without duties in 1337.¹³ Collectors at Bristol were said by a Devon merchant in 1432 to have concealed duties of £44 collected on some 800 cloths; and in 1433 the searcher there informed the Exchequer that the collectors had concealed £148 collected in 1432.¹⁴ There is however nothing suggestive of such large-scale fraud in fifteenth-century Hull. An apparently substantial case of eight accusations against the controller Simon Waghen in 1430 in fact added up to allegations of concealment of only about £5 7s. 0d. on goods worth under £60.¹⁵ Again in 1471 the king was informed that £300 of uncustomed goods had been arrested but on investigation it was found that only 40 marks were involved.¹⁶ In fact the vast majority of cases recorded in the Exchequer Memoranda Rolls concern very minor offences, and the total value involved for the whole country for a year adds up to a negligible fraction of the total trade recorded in the customs accounts for the same year. The steady stream of prosecutions could as well be interpreted as showing that searchers and informers were vigorously pursuing and limiting smuggling and corruption as that these took place on a large scale. Furthermore when accounts from different sources can occasionally be compared with one another, they do indicate similar orders of magnitude and do not suggest large-scale discrepancies.

Still, it remains true that successful offences can leave no trace in records; and a final judgement on the completeness of the accounts involves a balancing of probabilities rather than certainties: one needs to assess whether smuggling and concealment were worthwhile, whether the penalties were worth the risk, and whether the offences were likely to be discovered. On balance it is highly likely that smuggling was usually not worth the risk, at least not on a large scale, although some sharp practice in packing might be tempting. Medieval duties were not especially high, being between 5 and 6¼ per cent on the declared value of miscellaneous goods, which was itself much lower than the market selling price.¹⁷ Taxes on cloth for Hansards and denizens varied between 2½ and 4 per cent, but for aliens were probably nearer 7 to 9 per cent. Only wool bore really heavy duties, perhaps reaching 50 per cent of the value when wool prices fell in the fifteenth century. Merchants of substance, especially those with bulky or with delicate and expensive goods, were unlikely to want to run into out-of-the-way creeks and would probably prefer the facilities of a big port with unloading tackle, dry warehouses, porters and brokers to arrange faster sales and return cargoes. Their smuggling, if done at all, would accordingly have had to be done under the noses or with the connivance of the port officials. Certainly the temptations for officials handling hundreds or even thousands of pounds a year must have been high; but their annual fee of £10 was not a bad wage for the time and the penalties for offences discovered were high. One of the collectors accused at Bristol in 1433 for his share in the misappropriated £148 spent four years in the Flete prison in the King's mercy, with fines and amercements totalling over £8,686 hanging over his head.¹⁸

Such penalties would have been a great disincentive if detection was likely, but how likely it was is a matter for speculation. Small-scale running across the North Sea or the Channel into unmanned creeks must have been easy enough, yet even there informers were active, and coasting onwards with large amounts of foreign goods might provoke demands to see unloading cockets. For outward smuggling there was also the danger that bad weather would blow foreign-bound ships back to an English port where searchers might ask to see exporting cockets. As for smuggling and corruption in the big ports themselves, this was likely to be expensive and difficult to keep secret for long. At least both the collectors, probably their clerks, and certainly the controller would have to be involved; the searcher and minor quay officials might also have needed bribing; and the bribes would have to be enough to offset well-paid informing. Moreover other merchants were unlikely to view happily the unfair competition and profits of rivals known to be avoiding duties; and some might inform because they did not take kindly to paying duties into the private purses of the collectors. There is also no reason to suppose that all officials were dishonest, and no doubt one vigorous and honest man could inhibit large-scale collusion and be vigorous in uncovering small offences.

On balance then the criticisms sometimes made of the value of the customs accounts do not invalidate their use. Some of the allegations can be dismissed entirely and others merely mean that care must be taken in interpretation of the accounts. There is no reason to suppose that what smuggling did take place changed dramatically in scope or scale in the middle ages, nor that it was as high as in later centuries; it probably occurred at a fairly consistent level. We can in any case be sure that what is recorded in the accounts was in fact traded; and thus we have at least minimum statistics for both the general trends and the pattern of English trade nationally and regionally.

II The customs accounts and the trade of Hull, 1450–1500

Although the late medieval historian could wish for more, the number of particular accounts for Hull for this half-century is relatively abundant. There are twenty-eight surviving separate accounts: fifteen are collectors' accounts and thirteen are controllers', ten of which partly or wholly correspond to a surviving collectors' account. Only four accounts cover the full Exchequer year of Michaelmas to Michaelmas, and altogether they cover fewer than nine of the fifty years under review; but they are spread well enough between 1450 and 1490 to indicate the general pattern of trade and changes in it.

The two collectors were appointed to collect all customs and subsidies together, receiving three separate writs of authorisation for this purpose.¹⁹ As in most provincial ports, by this period they amalgamated the record of all duties and sent in one consolidated account to the Exchequer. The only exceptions to this practice in Hull occurred in 1458–60 (when Richard Anson was appointed to collect tunnage and poundage separately to hand directly to the Earl of Warwick to whom it had been assigned for expenses of keeping the sea)²⁰ and in 1462–3 (when John Dey collected the same separately for a short time).²¹

Over this period of fifty years thirty-two men held the position of collector for terms stretching from a few months to twelve years, some serving more than once.²² Most were merchants and some appear frequently in the accounts, although generally not when they themselves were collectors except in the case of John Fereby. The controllership was held by fifteen men, the great majority being outsiders and king's men (king's clerks and yeomen) as they should have been, but some (like Henry Williamson) were apparently also local merchants. Despite the Crown's general concern to cross-check its administrative procedures it is clear that Hull went without controllers at times. Some of the gaps were short, probably occasioned by death in office; in other cases there were attempts to fill the post, and appointments were made but for some reason not taken up. In 1487–9, for instance, Hull was without a controller for nearly two years. The same periods of vacancy do not appear among the collectors; either the posts were easier to fill or the Crown was more diligent in filling them, because they were seen as the more essential ones.

¹⁹ Letters appointing William Eland and Nicholas Elys in 1453 illustrate this practice, see C.F.R. 1452–61, pp. 3, 4, 8.

Although by 1450 the customs revenue in Hull had fallen considerably with the drop in wool exports, the responsibility of the collectors was still quite onerous. They handled some £3,000 to £4,000 a year in 1450–3 and over £7,000 in 1454–5. Thereafter they were usually responsible for £1,000 to £2,000, until 1473 when the revenue dropped to some £500 to £600 a year, largely due to the grant allowing Staplers to keep their wool duties in their own hands. The collectors, however, were still responsible for recording the amount of wool and the duties chargeable on it.

The accounts were sent to Westminster in the form of parchment rolls with membranes sewn together Exchequer fashion, head to head. Although the collectors' accounts are sometimes entitled Liber . . . contrarotulatoris they are all in the same form. The officials used a straightforward and concise format, as the frontispiece shows. Although Latin was the language formally employed, English had long been present in commodity lists, as fourteenth-century accounts amply show. The use of English gradually increases in the fifteenth century, partly due to an expansion in imported manufactured goods, for some of which Latin equivalents might be unknown to the clerks. However this development also reflects the steady encroachment of English into official documents, even where the Latin was perfectly well known; thus we find ferrum and yrne, oleum and oyle, remes and ores running side by side in the same account. Only once however, in the controller's account for 1465 (below no. 13), does the basic framework itself fall into English.

All the rolls show signs of auditing. The collectors' accounts (although not the controllers') are usually full of marginal notes to catch the auditors' eye and to make picking out the different rates of duty easier; thus for cloth pan(n)i s(ine) g(r)ano Hans(e) or ind(igene) or al(ienigene) are frequently found in the margins. When men of Veere obtained their particular exemptions, civ(is) de Camfer appeared beside their names and when Hull merchants enjoyed their grants b(re)ve appeared beside theirs. Errors were also noted and adjustments made to totals, as in nos. 6 and 7; and the notes on the rolls record that they have been duly examined with the parallel controller's or collectors' roll. At the end of the controller's roll comes the date of its delivery to the Exchequer and a note that the controller handed it in in person and took his oath at that time. This information reveals that delivery usually took place in November in the case of an account ending at Michaelmas; this allowed Hull officials some six weeks to make a fair copy of their final account and get it down to Westminster. Occasionally, however, the accounts were not submitted until the following January and February.

Although the information in the accounts is largely self-explanatory once the customs system is understood, some issues require further comment. In the first place, Hull's customs jurisdiction covered the Yorkshire coast and North Lincolnshire²³ and took in a number of outports, even if by the fifteenth century only Scarborough and sometimes Grimsby were worth opening. Scarborough itself was not even kept open all the time,²⁴ no doubt because the volume of goods sent through it (valued at between £64 and £317 in a full year) was low, only once passing 10 per cent of the total handled by Hull collectors.²⁵ Grimsby, when open in 1464–5, accounted for only 1 per cent of Hull's trade that year. This low activity of the outports is in marked contrast to the early fourteenth century when alien trade in them equalled and surpassed that at Hull itself.²⁶

The details of shipping at Hull are fairly extensive as the accountants always gave the name of each ship and its homeport as well as the master's name. That it is the master's name and not the owner's which the officials recorded is made clear both from the accounts of other ports (which use such phrases as navis unde magister est . . .), and from a variety of other documents relating to Hull and its ships which identify the names of active masters. Some of the latter, such as Robert Stevenson, John Porter, Henry Baillie and Henry Stabyll, appear regularly in these accounts, thus indicating the length of their active careers as well as the variety of routes they sailed and knew. Stevenson's name appears from 1450 to at least 1472 in association most often with the Anne but also with the Trinity, Cristofer, and Anthony of Hull. He regularly sailed to Iceland (with the Anthony in 1462 and 1465, the Trinity in 1468, and the Anne in 1470 and 1471) and might fit in a spring voyage for wine, presumably to Bordeaux, before setting off for Iceland in May or June. It is however possible that not all these voyages were by the same man. In 1471 and 1473 a Robert Stevenson is associated with the Laurence of Hull and the sailing and arrival dates present problems. One Robert Stevenson left for Iceland with the Anne on 11 April 1471 while the other did not arrive with wine on the Laurence until 18 April 1471. As explained below however, the dates in question are customing dates and not actual arrival and departure dates; so it is still possible, if unlikely, that Stevenson disembarked from the Laurence before the wine was unloaded and went straight out on the Anne which had been loading in his absence. John Porter, master at various times of the Mary, Anne, Nicholas and Trinity of Hull, likewise sailed regularly on the Iceland route (1465, 1468, 1470) and also fitted in spring wine voyages (1467, 1470, 1471, 1472). Stevenson and Porter also sailed at other times, probably on the Low Countries route. Few Hull masters were associated with the same ship without change for more than a year or two; this may suggest that they were employed by owners who competed for the most experienced masters, the latter being rarely out of work. It is possible however that several masters were themselves part-owners, with shares in more than one ship, any of which they might command.

²⁵ Hull's trade in wool, cloth and wine far surpassed that of the outports too.

²⁶ P.R.O. E122/55/17, 19, 56/10, 14 for 1305–6, 1306–7, 1310–11; Ravenser was then particularly busy.

The numbers of ships at Hull meant that the port was fairly busy although probably not positively overworked. The ships arriving in the 1460s (between sixty-one and sixty-five a year) show a drop, although not a big one, from the late fourteenth century when sixty-six to eighty-five might arrive.²⁷ The major contraction took place in the 1470s and lasted for the rest of the century leaving Hull with about forty arrivals a year. This was not offset by a rise in the tunnage of ships since this was a period of increasing numbers of small ships, especially on the North Sea routes, perhaps reflecting the declining volume of trade. However some ships in the period still had large cargoes to shift and gave adequate work to the quay-side community.

The exact type and tunnage of vessels is not recoverable from the customs accounts. In Hull the types are hidden by the entirely conventional use of navis for every vessel; and no collectors in any port bothered to record the ships' tonnages. Although tonnages can themselves rarely be assessed from the cargoes because of the great variety of weights and measures used for the commodities, details of wine cargoes indicate some minimum tonnages.²⁸ Many ships unloaded under 100 tuns of wine, but a few were larger: the Trinity and George of Hull unloaded 197 and 219¾ tuns in 1461. However, the Hull accounts have a great advantage over many of the south coast and London accounts, in that they consistently record the ships' homeports, thus indicating the amount of Hull and other English shipping and its ability to stand up to foreign competition. Much of the foreign shipping was drawn from around the North Sea as would be expected, with a number from Scotland (especially at Scarborough) but with far more from Low Countries ports. The busiest of these ports by far was Veere (Camfere) with over 106 ships recorded overall in these accounts. Its nearest rival was Westenschouwen with only thirty-nine and then Zierickzee with twenty-two. At least sixteen other ports sent ships, including Edam which even then was exporting cheese.²⁹ Three or four Hansard ships, all except one from Danzig, arrived each year before the war of 1469, and this rose to five to six a year in the peace which ensued. From regions to the south of England Hull attracted a trickle of vessels from the Calais area and from Normandy and Brittany in the 1450s and 1460s, but these dropped away completely in the 1470s. Occasionally Spaniards thought Hull worth a voyage, as in 1465 and 1468.³⁰ Hull's own ships were reinforced by a few other English ones: a number of local ones from York and Hedon, the occasional wine ship from Dartmouth or Sandwich, a passing ship from Newcastle, or a London vessel coming to pick up wool for the Staplers. From the longer accounts which may be used for this sort of analysis, it appears that English shipping stood up fairly well to alien competition, generally providing 42 to 47 per cent of all shipping movements, Hull itself often providing some 30 to 40 per cent. The number of ship movements does not of course itself accurately reflect the volume of trade carried, and therefore the amount earned by shipping, because of the considerable variations in ship tonnages. Yet, as explained above, the variety of weights and measures makes calculation of total cargo volume impossible. Nevertheless, if branches of trade are considered separately, it is clear that English ships did comparatively well. They carried 39 to 60 per cent of the miscellaneous imports by value, and 85 to 100 per cent of the wine by tonnage. They exported 100 per cent of the volume of wool, some 80 to 90 per cent of the number of cloths and about 60 per cent of miscellaneous goods by value.³¹

²⁸ Ships may not of course be unloading their full cargoes, having perhaps already called and unloaded some cargo elsewhere.

The origins of the foreign ships are also useful indicators of the width of Hull's overseas contacts since destinations and last ports of call are not given at Hull (and rarely elsewhere except at Bristol). Judgements about the importance of branches of trade have to be based on these homeports, on certain precisely identified aliens such as the Hansards and men of Veere, and on the type of cargoes carried in the ships. All this information needs handling with caution, and one can perhaps be more certain about the more easily identifiable Hansard and Icelandic trade than about trade with the Low Countries, where many small ports offered a wide range of goods and Bruges was a great entrepôt supplying goods from all over Europe. It is particularly difficult to know where departing English ships were bound unless they returned within a short time with specialised cargoes; thus wine or stockfish would suggest that Bordeaux or Iceland had been their goal.

Some idea of turn-round times and of length of voyages can be obtained from the dates of arrival and departure, but again caution is needed. Ships might come in or go out unrecorded because the first leg of their journey was simply to another English port and accordingly no goods were dutiable. They may also be unrecorded because they sailed in ballast only. Moreover the dates recorded are almost certainly not the precise arrival and departure dates but more likely the first (or at least early) loading and unloading dates copied from the cockets.³² Nonetheless they are close enough to the actual movement dates to give an impression of the lengths of voyages and turn-round times. They are certainly useful for indicating general seasonal movements as when ships leave for Iceland in May to June and return about September. They also indicate that wool was regularly exported all the year round and not just after the wool clip; and they similarly make clear that at Hull, as elsewhere, sailings continued throughout the year, although early summer and autumn saw the busiest months and January and February were the slackest.

³¹ For 1453, 1464-5, 1466-7, 1471-2, 1489-90; see below nos. 1, 10, 12, 14, 22, 28.

The merchants listed in the accounts were those liable for duty and should therefore have been the owners of the goods and not their agents. They were usually described simply as denizen, alien, or Hansard and any further identification of the denizens and aliens must usually be sought in other documents. The alien's nationality may be the same as that of the foreign ship he used but was not necessarily so. When customs grants were made to particular groups, however, a note was generally made of their nationality on the accounts.³³ Thus the men of Veere allowed to trade on the same terms as the Hansards from 1471, in gratitude for Henry of Borselle's help to Edward IV in exile, were described specifically as citizens of Veere, and the burgesses of Hull were specifically noted between 1463 and 1473 because of their grant of £40 a year from their own customs and subsidies.³⁴ This concession is interesting since, although in the grant itself there was apparently no limitation except that duties on wool, fells, and hides be excluded, in practice the collectors allowed the exemption only on the exports of miscellaneous goods, not on cloth exports nor any imports. However since the £40 was easily attained by these goods there was no reason for complaint.³⁵ In the next grant of £60 which began in 1484 the concession was clearly allowed on everything except wool, fells and hides.³⁶ The shippers' names include some women, most of whom were merchants' wives who appeared only for a short time as they wound up their husbands' businesses. The lists of merchants' names are themselves invaluable original source material for analyses of individual careers and of the commercial activity of the merchant communities of Hull and York as a whole.

The detailed lists of commodities indicate the rich variety of goods going through Hull. Exports were more limited in type than imports but there was nevertheless a wide range of exported goods besides wool and cloth. These latter were declining in quantity, although they retained importance. Wool still averaged exports of 1,500 sacks a year in the 1450s but dropped to only 250 to 270 sacks a year in the 1480s and 1490s. Cloth exports were more buoyant, with a prosperous decade in 1474–84; but they were nevertheless at an overall level lower than in the late fourteenth century, with especially marked slumps in the 1460s and later 1480s.³⁷ Already the attractions of London as a market were drawing the clothiers away from

Hull, which could no longer rely on cloth and wool exports to maintain her prosperity. However trade in other products from her hinterland could be of assistance in this respect. The lead trade flourished and was often, at least in the mid-fifteenth century, dominated by the Hull burgesses themselves. Short particular accounts make it difficult to see a continuous pattern here; but it seems possible that there was a drop in the mid-1460s and then an erratic increase in later decades. During six months in 1461–2 nearly 150 fothers valued at £598 were exported; in the year 1466–7 only ninety-six fothers, valued at £321 13s. 4d.; then in 1471–2 a peak was reached of nearly 329 fothers, valued at £1,092 3s. 4d. Further high levels were recorded in the enrolled accounts for 1492–3 and 1496–7.³⁸ All these levels compare quite well with the booming early fourteenth century when exports of sixty-three, thirty-eight and 474 loads were exported by aliens alone and they were greatly in excess of recorded lead exports at the turn of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries.³⁹

Other exports were weaker, although corn destined for the Low Countries and for Iceland could be valuable. In 1464–5 various grains and meals were assessed at £180–190, and in 1466–7 rose to £200–250, but often they cannot have been assessed at much more than £20–50. Fish was rarely valued at more than £20–50, and hides reached a peak of only £27. Manufactured cloth in the form of coverlets was assessed at £25 in 1489–90. The trade to Iceland, usually valued at some £300–500 a year and at as much as £720 in 1465, clearly provided a useful supplement to the Hull and York merchants' activities. The supplies were mainly foodstuffs and raw materials — meal, beer, malt, butter, honey, linen, osmund and bitumen — but also included a miscellany of manufactured goods, including pins, points, kettles, knives and horseshoes.⁴⁰

The imports to Hull show a very great variety both of raw materials and manufactured goods. They indicate an English hinterland where woad and madder for the cloth-dyeing industries were in full demand and where there was enough wealth to provide busy markets in overseas consumer goods — not only the more mundane tiles, pots, wainscot and paper, but also the frivolities of beads, lutestrings and clavicymbals.

The lists of commodities in the accounts unfortunately rarely indicate the exact quality and provenance of the goods. Iron is sometimes described as boutalle, land, Spanish or Liège, but is generally recorded simply as iron.⁴¹ Similarly wine is sometimes called Spanish or Poitevin but most was probably from Bordeaux which continued to be England's main supplier even after the loss of Gascony. Small amounts of Rhenish wine are sometimes so called and sometimes identifiable by the use of ames instead of tuns and pipes as the cargo unit. In the case of cloth exports the unit used effectively conceals the variety of quality and type which northern producers could make since most exports were converted pro rata to a notional cloth of assize (a broadcloth approximately 24 yards long and $1\frac{3}{4}$ to 2 yards wide after fulling according to various statutes)⁴² in three qualities — without grain, in half-grain, and in grain. This was a rough and ready way of sorting out the better cloths which had been worth dyeing with the expensive kermes or grain dye and which therefore could stand higher duties. The entry 'cloth without grain' therefore covers a great variety of blues, greens, medleys, rays, and even reds dyed in madder; it tells us nothing about the provenance of the cloth and not even much about its size. Many may have been broadcloths but other sizes were charged and converted pro rata: legislation makes it clear that kerseys were charged at three to the cloth of assize and various accounts show straits and narrow straits converted at two and four to the cloth of assize. Some cloth exports were not included in the conventional unit. Welsh, Irish, and frieze cloths were charged on their value; worsteds were charged by the piece; and manufactured articles such as mantles, caps, and hose were also charged on their value, but none of these last categories was important at Hull at this time. No other weights or measures conceal the form of the goods in quite the same way, but they all provide problems of identifying and defining long-forgotten and perhaps local units, which sometimes needs to be done to compare volume of trade at different ports.

Values are given in the accounts for all goods charged ad valorem but they are not easy to use for a history of prices. Firstly the Hull collectors rarely valued each commodity separately but simply recorded the total value of a merchant's shipment even if it was of mixed goods. Secondly, even where they did occasionally value a single commodity, valuations were not at the current market prices. The legislation granting poundage and the writs of commission to the collectors make it clear that the valuation was still as it had been in 1303, the merchant's certified buying price — taking no account of transport costs, handling charges, scarcity value or profit. Moreover by the fifteenth century many valuations, especially of common and bulky goods, had become conventionalised, moving them even further from market prices. There may even have been some common books of rates, although none survives,⁴³ since in most ports, including Hull, standard valuations can be found for some such goods, as for example of oil at £4 the tun and woad at £5 the pipe. There is more variety among unusual or luxury goods and in small manufactured articles where, no doubt, the method of valuation conformed to the collectors' writs. Even conventional valuations, however, are of use for comparative purposes and for providing minimum figures for merchants' investments in their trade. Indeed it is only by using these valuations in the particular accounts that any indication can be found of the balance of Hull's trade. This balance is impossible to calculate from enrolled accounts because of their amalgamation of import and export valuations in the total of dutiable goods, and even with the particulars it is difficult to assess. Not only are there many gaps in the particulars but estimates must be made for major sections of trade, notably in cloth, wool, woolfells and wine, where goods were charged by the piece rather than by value. Without exact figures for such important commodities final statistics can never be precise but they can offer an approximate guide to the possible position. Estimates from the four longest surviving particular accounts, 1464-5, 1466-7, 1471-2 and 1489-90, indicate that Hull's imports and exports may have just about balanced, taking one year with another.⁴⁴

Finally the amount of customs and subsidies due to the Crown is recorded in the collectors' accounts although not in the controller's, whose roll was simply a check on the movement of goods. The duties might be entered alongside each shipment or at the end of the whole ship's cargo or at the end of a membrane as a running total. Then the final grand total was recorded on the last membrane and usually broken down into its constituent parts.

The broad outlines of the changes in the volume of Hull's overseas trade are already known, for the marked decline at the end of the fifteenth century has already emerged clearly enough from the figures published from the enrolled accounts.⁴⁵ However the Hull particular accounts published here provide a wealth of detailed information which lies behind the figures. They indicate which branches of trade were still flourishing, and which dying; who was handling the trade and who was being forced out. For the later fifteenth century they show that within a pattern of overall decline merchants and ships of Hull itself were still very active in all their branches of trade from Bordeaux in the south to Iceland in the north. The inhabitants of Edward I's once new town were maintaining their share in their port's trade even if they could no longer maintain its earlier commercial importance against the pressures of London's competition.

⁴⁴ For this assessment wine may be valued at £4 the tun as in no. 5, cloths as £1 to £2 each as in nos. 10, 12, 14, 24, 28. Wool was never valued by collectors but £3 to £4 the sack indicates a possible level for the calculation; T. H. Lloyd, The Movement of Wool Prices in Medieval England, Economic History Review supplement, 6 (Cambridge, 1973) p. 49.

EDITORIAL METHOD

All the surviving collectors' accounts between 1450 and 1500 are printed in this edition. Their corresponding controllers' accounts have been separately listed, but controllers' accounts themselves have been fully printed below only when their corresponding collectors' accounts have been lost. In general the editing principles suggested by R. F. Hunnisett, Editing Records for Publication (British Records Association, 1977) have been adopted, but they have been modified for economy of space. A series of documents such as these, written in a variety of hands by clerks with inconsistent palaeographical practices, poses particular problems. Some arbitrary decisions have had to be made, for instance as to whether terminal strokes on English words are merely small flourishes or are substantial enough to indicate abbreviation by the clerk. Other editors might well have made other decisions. The main principles used are set out below; and in the short introduction to each of the documents printed attention is drawn to special points, if any, concerning language and abbreviations.

Form. The accounts are customarily terse in form, although somewhat repetitive. They provide shipping details in a continuous sentence, then list merchants, their nationalities, their goods and the values of these in the following way:

Johannes Thomlynson ind' pro vj b'ell' allec' et di'	}	val' vj li'
last' allec' vacue xxx bound' lini v^c lib' ferri

Customs and subsidies due may then be placed after the cargo, or in a total after each ship, or even in a total at the end of a membrane. This form clearly lends itself to comparatively economical publication; but for an even more economical layout on the printed page, and for clarity of use for the reader some omissions of non-essential words have been made in this edition. While descriptions of merchants as alienigena or Hansa are retained, indigena has been omitted, except in certain unusual circumstances, when these are noted in the introduction to the relevant account. All merchants without description in the following pages are therefore to be understood as denizens. The continuous list of commodities for each merchant has been spaced out into two columns which should be read across the page to recover the order in the original manuscripts. The value of these mixed cargoes has been printed alongside the final item of the cargo. It must be stressed that these values never include wine (except Rhenish) and never include cloths of assize. The values of the latter (given only in the case of alien exports) are always recorded separately. The customs and subsidies due have not been included here because they were charged at standard rates and can easily be calculated if needed. The grand totals of commodities and duties at the end of the collectors' accounts have, however, been included when they survive. Marginalia of the standard eye-catching sort mentioned above have likewise been omitted; unusual ones have been noted. Pro before the cargo has been omitted, but the extensions of the words following it remain naturally in the ablative case. Valor has also been omitted, as have li' s' d' in the valuations of goods and in the totals of money.

Capitals: the use of these has been modernised throughout.

Punctuation has been supplied in the titles to the accounts.

Grammatical errors, most common with case endings and agreements (pro zonas; pro ij parva barellis), are uncorrected and attention is drawn to them by the use of [sic] in the text (for allegis albi vacue see the glossary of goods imported).

Numerals in the accounts for dates, amounts of goods, and sums of money are Roman throughout the manuscripts, with the sole exception of some marginal notes in E122/62/7, no. 12 below. All numerals are printed in this edition in Arabic for economy of space and setting and for ease of reading, except for C, D, M, which are ambiguous (see glossary of weights and measures). They are printed 2 C, 2 M etc. whether given as ij C, CC, ij M, MM etc in the manuscripts. Numbers given in scores, v^{xx} , vj^{xx} , xxx^{xx} etc. have been printed as 100, 120, 600 and so forth without further comment. Occasionally numbers were fully written out. Where this occurs in headings and titles they are printed as written, but in commodity lists they are printed in Arabic figures and a note is made in the introduction to the account where they occur. Where the accounts use 20s., 30s. up to 70s. and again 100s., the amounts have been standardised in the form of £ s. d.

Extensions: no system of extensions perfectly combines visual simplicity, ease of use and the precision demanded by the linguist and the palaeographer. There is rarely any doubt about the meaning of words in these documents, but the precise extensions intended by the clerks in this type of non-literary text present problems. Priority has been given to producing a clear, easily readable text with as few suspension marks as possible, and the following principles have been followed.

(a) Surnames, place-names and ships' names are given as in the text with final flourishes ignored, except in the case of Mar' which has been extended as in the form found elsewhere in the same account or by the same collectors. Common Latin Christian names have been extended and declined, but more unusual aliens' names have not been extended unless the documents make clear beyond any doubt that the clerk had Latinised them.

(b) Commodities, weights and measures have been silently extended in Latin or English where the clerk's intention and practice seem clear. Some English words for weights and measures have posed problems of number. They have normally been extended with a final 'e' or 'es' according to the sense, but there are numerous examples of fully extended English words to show that the clerks did not always use plurals where expected; when therefore a singular remains in the text where a plural might be expected, this is what the clerk used. One exception is the word 'warppe' which is never found in the plural and which is therefore extended only into the singular, whatever the sense demands.

(c) Severely abbreviated words with common Latin and English stems have been extended in the language most used in the same text, or in those of the same official. Thus osm' could be osmundus but, wherever it is spelt out, osmondes has been used by the clerks and this form has therefore been used throughout this edition.

(d) No attempt has been made to extend adjectives where languages are mixed, as in leder tannat', unless there are clear examples of extension as with parvis mastes.

(e) Ex^a in the auditors' notes has been extended in the plural (examinantur) where the account is of more than one membrane. The auditors' note to E122/63/1, no. 26 below (iste due rotule exāiatur) and accounts for other ports make clear that this was the auditors' practice.

Abbreviations retained in the text are mainly of common, unambiguous words (al', bar') and are kept for economy of space. A few others are unambiguous in meaning but difficult to extend because the language intended is unclear: examples include chaldr' and its variant forms (chaldre, chaldrus); last' (laste, lasta, lastum); par' (pare, paria); pec' (pece, pecia). In some of the final totals lan', pann', val' and vin' have been left unextended because the case intended is unclear. The sense suggests the use of the genitive and this is written by the clerk in nos. 2, 14 and 18 below, but the clerk adopted the nominative case in no. 28. These words have therefore been left unextended in the other accounts. The abbreviations retained in this edition are given in the list following this editorial note.

Marginalia, unless they are of the common kind referred to under Form above, are provided in an editorial note in the text.

Interlineations and additions have been given in Roman script in round brackets, with any editorial comment in the same brackets in italics.

Erasures have been noted in Roman script in angle brackets. < >

Lacunae through damage and staining are indicated by . . . in the text. Information to fill these gaps, taken from the corresponding controller's roll for the main text or from the enrolled account for the final totals, is supplied in Roman script in square brackets. Words which can be conjectured with certainty from the context have been supplied by the editor in italics in square brackets.

Editorial comment is printed in italics, and is also placed within square brackets in the text.

Comprehensive indices of proper names and of all commodities would run into some thousands of entries and, unfortunately, for reasons of space and cost have had to be excluded in this edition. However, indices of all home ports of shipping and of all shipmasters have been provided, and the more unusual commodities (defined as those occurring fewer than six times in the text) have been indexed within the glossaries.

NOTES ON USING THE TEXT

To make accurate use of the text the reader must be aware of the following points.

The merchants are denizens (native Englishmen and others paying as native Englishmen) unless otherwise stated. The commodities (given in the ablative case when in Latin, although the preceding pro has been omitted here for reasons of space) should be read from left to right across the page for their order in the accounts: they have been separated into columns here for ease of reading. The valuations of the miscellaneous goods are for the whole cargo of a particular merchant and are placed in this edition against the last item of that cargo. It is important to note that these valuations never included wine (except Rhenish) and never included cloth, since both commodities are charged duties by the unit and not by their value. On the rare occasions when alien cloth was valued for poundage the value is given quite separately beside the record of that cloth.

All collectors' accounts are printed in full but, although all controllers' accounts have been noted in sequence, they are printed in full only when their corresponding collectors' account is missing, as they duplicate the information in the collectors' accounts.

Full explanations of the contents of the accounts will be found in the introduction and full details of the forms adopted on the following pages will be found in the section on editorial method.

1. Particulars of account of Nicholas Elys and William Eland, collectors, from 6 April to Michaelmas 1453

The four membranes, sewn Exchequer style, head to head, vary slightly in width. The first is 27 cm, the second and third are each 28.2 cm, and the fourth is 24.8 cm. They are 76, 71.5, 78 and 33 cm long respectively. Membranes 1 to 3 are somewhat damaged on the left with names and some amounts irretrievably lost. Totals of customs and subsidies due are given after each ship, but there is no final total summa because these four membranes are part of the account only, covering imports, and they would have been followed by further membranes recording departures and the final summa.

The language is a mixture of Latin and English usual in these accounts and those of other ports. The framework of the account and most southern and bulk commodities are recorded in Latin (vinum, ferrum, sal, piscis) but a number of eastern goods and manufactured commodities are given in English, and sometimes in corruptions of German and Dutch (hoppes, ketills, bere, waynescottes, lewant). Measures are similarly linguistically mixed, but the clerk of this account is more meticulous than most in his consistent use of dolium for wine, tonne for woad, and tonnetight for iron. (Usually dolium is used for all three.) His extreme abbreviation of p' is certainly for petra, but is shown here in square brackets. The marginalia are unexceptional, being the standard eye-catching notes of wine or other goods owned by aliens in long cargoes. Running totals of customs and subsidies due were informally noted at the end of membrane dorsos on the left. There were no privileged groups in the accounts apart from the Hansards.

2. Particulars of account of William Eland and Thomas Everyngham, collectors, 4 April to 10 June 1455 (fragment only)

*That this fragment of a particular account is the final membrane of Eland's and Everyngham's account for this period is clear from a comparison of its final totals with those for these dates in the enrolled account (E356/20 m. 21). This membrane, now between 12 and 15 cm wide and some 74 cm long, is badly damaged on the right and has lost all record of values and of customs and subsidies due. Much of the detail given in the summa of the arrangements made with the Staplers for repayments of loans to the Crown is likewise lost. The terms allowed to the Staplers appear in C.C.R. 1454-61, pp. 13-22 and C.P.R. 1452-61, pp. 209-13; the grants to Penycoke and to Carlisle are recorded in C.P.R. 1452-61, pp. 103-4, 217. The grant to the Prior and Convent of Bridlington, cited on the enrolled customs account, allowed them to export up to thirty sacks a year tax free and was dated 20 July 1452. Full details of how much these wool exporters benefited at Hull from their concessions are recorded on the enrolled account (E356/20 m. 21). A short account of the arrangements is given by W. I. Haward, 'The relations between the Lancastrian government and the merchants of the Staple from 1449 to 1461', in Studies in English Trade in the Fifteenth Century, ed. E. Power and M. M. Postan (1933) pp. 295-301.*

3. Particulars of account of Thomas Moigne, controller, from 1 January to 12 August 1460

This single membrane, approximately 28.5 cm wide and 74.5 cm long, covers exports only and is exceptionally badly worn and rubbed. Little can be read without ultra violet light and even then much remains unclear.

The account was possibly not presented at the right time for audit since on the enrolled account the auditors entered the collectors' totals with the note absque contrarotulamento Thome Moygne contrarotulatoris regis ibidem per idem tempus (P.R.O. E356/20 m.24v). Although this account's figures do not tally with the number of ships recorded on the overlapping collectors' account for 19 June to 12 August (which follows, no. 4 below), the cargoes on the four of the six ships which it does record mainly do tally. However on the Petre of Hull William Brounfeld appears twice in Moygne's account, whereas in the collectors' account William Bromfleyt is recorded in the first place; and the cargo of the Cateryn of Cawmfere is given as brasium by Moygne and ordeum by the collectors.

It is possible that at this period the civil wars and the change of royal dynasty caused some confusion in the customs administration in Hull. Not only was this account apparently not presented in time, but no account at all is enrolled for Hull at the Exchequer for 12 August 1460 to 11 April 1461, although the auditors noted that William Bracebrigge and Robert Anson had been collectors for that time (Anson died at the battle of Wakefield in December 1460). The only other port for which there is a gap in the enrolled accounts at this time is also a northern one: Newcastle for 20 September 1460 to 10 May 1461.

4. Particulars of account of William Bracebrigge and Robert Forster, collectors, from 19 June to 12 August 1460

These three membranes are, unusually, sewn head to toe in Chancery style. They are approximately 20.6 cm wide and 30.7, 29, and 22 cm long, making a roll of 81.7 cm in total length. Also unusually the account has the second collector's name added at the end of the heading. This may indicate some disruption in the customs administration at Hull at this time, as mentioned in the introduction to account no. 3, above. There are some variations in content where the accounts overlap. The language used is the usual mixture of Latin and English, but occasionally numbers are written out in full. The customs and subsidies due are noted beside each shipment for each shipper, except for cloth which is totalled for each ship. No privileged groups appear except for the Hansards. Marginalia are mostly designed to draw attention to Hansard cloths (eg H' 19) and to total cloths on each ship (eg p' 164). However occasional running totals are expressed in dots on the left hand side (eg ::· :···). The final summa notes particularly that the Hansard cloths are short cloths.

5. Particulars of account of Thomas Blount, controller, from 7 March to Michaelmas 1461 (including Scarborough)

The six membranes are sewn Exchequer style, head to head. Membranes 1 to 5 are respectively 28.5, 28.8, 29, 28.5 and 28.3 cm wide and 61, 55.5, 58.5, 34.5, and 48 cm long. Membrane 5, recording wool exports, is badly damaged on the left side. Membrane 6 is a narrower membrane for Scarborough, measuring 17.5 cm wide and 51.5 cm long. No record of the customs and subsidies due is to be expected on a controller's account; but Blount does give a short total on the dorse of membrane 5 together with a most unusual valuation for 306 tuns of wine at £4 the tun. In fact only 301¹/₄ tuns appear in the account, a total accepted by the auditors (E356/21 m.15). The language is the usual mixture of Latin and English but appears to move closer to English on membrane 5 where 'a' is often used for one. Almost all numbers are written out in full on membrane 1, face and dorse, and all are written out on membrane 5. However this is done only occasionally on other membranes. Several grammatical errors occur (for example pro unum).

There were no privileged groups in this account apart from the Hansards, and marginalia are simply paragraph marks for each shipper on membranes 1 and 5, and for each ship on the other membranes. The differences between membranes 1 and 5 and the rest suggest two compilers, although Blount should have kept his account in his own hand. Differences both in format and handwriting between this account and Blount's other accounts seem to confirm that he did not always do so, although no licences allowing him to appoint a deputy have so far been found.

6. Particulars of account of John Dey, collector of tunnage and poundage, from 16 August 1462 to 26 February 1463

This account marks one of the rare occasions when tunnage and poundage were collected separately at Hull, probably because they were ear-marked for a particular expense, as with the earlier example for 1458–60 noted in Appendix A. This practice ended in March 1463, from which month John Dey and John Fereby were responsible together for collecting all customs and subsidies as usual.

This single membrane, 28 cm wide and 40.4 cm long, recording exports only, was once attached to the three membranes of the following document, E122/62/3, which records the imports to Hull and Scarborough's trade for the same period. The summa on this membrane covers all four membranes. Dey did not keep his account well and the auditors had trouble with it. On this membrane the ships of Person and Adreaynson are out of their proper order and have been re-ordered by marginal notes. Dey also omitted the value of goods on Person's ship from his total, which accordingly had later to be amended. The membranes of E122/62/3 also present problems and two valuations were changed per contrarotulamentum. Moreover, the total of £2,615.5.0 originally carried over to this membrane from the other three does not tally with the amended total given there which is £2,616.15.0. This last figure is correct since when it is added to the amended total for this membrane, it gives the grand total of £3,219.5.0, providing subsidies of £160.19.3 which is what the auditors finally entered on the enrolled account. The language is the usual mixture of Latin and English. The marginalia record Dey's errors. As it is a subsidy account only no Hansard trade should be expected in the record.

7. Particulars of account of John Dey, collector of tunnage and poundage, from 16 August 1462 to 10 March 1463 (including Scarborough)

The three membranes are sewn Exchequer style, head to head. Membranes 1 and 2, recording imports to Hull, are respectively 28.5 and 28 cm wide and 63.8 and 61.5 cm long. Membrane 3, recording Scarborough's trade, is slightly narrower at 23 cm and is 28.5 cm long. The three were once attached to the preceding document, E122/62/2, the introduction to which comments on the separation of tunnage and poundage from the other duties, and on Dey's poor keeping of his account. The language is the usual mixture of Latin and English. It shows well the variety in abbreviations to be found in a single account with br', barrl' and barrell' all being used for barrellus. No Hansard trade is to be expected as this is a tunnage and poundage account. The marginalia picked out Dey's errors as the auditors checked through the account. Totals of the subsidies due are given under each ship on membrane 1 but only at the feet of membranes 2 and 3. The marginal note on membrane 2d probably indicates that Warwick nominated Dey as collector at this period as he did later (see Appendix A, below, under 1458 and 1466).

8. Particulars of account of John Fereby and John Grene, collectors, from 6 July to 26 August 1463

This account is accompanied by associated documents all sewn together and numbered 1–4 in a modern hand. They are contained in the original soft white leather pouch in which accounts were sent to the Exchequer.

Membrane 4, 26.2 cm wide and 75.5 cm long, is the collectors' account which is edited here. It records arrivals only. The customs and subsidies due are recorded after each ship. The language is the usual combination of Latin and English, but the mixture of the two within the same shipment is becoming more frequent, as on the ship of John Yverden where 1 parva barryll cum grene gyngour appears. There were no privileged groups apart from the Hansards, the account and the associated documents showing the paper work linked with the latter's privileges. Assessment was made on the account of the poundage due from them after each ship, and nihil was then noted beside the total. Most marginalia are simple ones designed to mark alien goods, denizen wine and Hansard cargoes. The certificated Hansards are marked by a dot in the left hand margin as in E122/62/7 (no. 12 below). Membrane 1, 28.3 cm wide and 56 cm long, is the corresponding roll of the controller (see no. 9 which follows).

Membrane 2, 22.3 cm wide and 30.5 cm long, is the collectors' formal letter requesting discharge of £24.0.6 within the sum of £32.5.6 due as poundage on Hansard goods, because properly certificated members of the Hansards' Gildhall in London were exempt in accordance with their privileges. These had just been specifically confirmed for two years and six months from Christmas 1462 by letter patent of Edward IV dated 9 March 1463. Sewn to the membrane is a letter (28.8 cm wide and 6.5 cm long) dated 9 July 1463 to the collectors from the Alderman and merchants of Germany in London certifying which merchants were members of their society (see appendix to the account below).

Membrane 3 is an informal list without heading, 10.4 cm wide and 16.2 cm long, undoubtedly meant as an aide memoire for the collectors rather than for formal submission to the Exchequer. On one side (the dorse by modern notation) is a list of non-certificated Hansards and the values of their goods in the exact order in which they appear in the controllers' account; and at the bottom is a note of the total value for certificated Hansards and the subsidy due (see appendix to this account below). It is clearly the calculation of the Hansard subsidy for which allowance is claimed in membrane 2.

9. Roll of Thomas Blount, controller, from 6 July to 26 August, 1463

This controller's account, consisting of a single membrane, 28.3 cm wide and 56 cm long, is sewn in with the collectors' account (see note to no. 8 above). It is well-preserved and clear and tallies in substance with the collectors' account. However the first two ships are recorded in reverse order and there are a number of spelling differences: for instance, loytes for loots, gern for garne, preusdeles for prussedelys, and the occasional use of the Latin remes instead of the English ores used by the collectors. The controller also uses the more usual copynhattes for the collectors' unusual toppynvyldhattes on the ship of Jasper Yverdson.

On the dorse appears examinatur cum rotulo Johannis Fereby et Johannis Grene nuper collectorum regis ibidem per idem tempus. There is no record of the delivery date to the Exchequer.

10. Particulars of account of John Dey, sole collector, from Michaelmas to 16 November 1464, and of John Dey and Roger Bussell, collectors, from 16 November 1464 to 18 March 1465

*These three membranes, sewn Exchequer style, are respectively 25, 27.4 and 26.7 cm wide and 50.4, 51.8 and 32 cm long. Membrane 1d has sewn to it a small slip (24.8 cm wide and 8 cm long) which records the total for John Dey's period of office alone. This account and 62/7 (no. 12 below) together cover a full year. The cloth export figures here were extracted by J. Lister, The Early Yorkshire Woollen Trade, Y.A.S. Record Series, 64 (1924) but it should be noted that his figures from the first ship contain minor errors.*

Customs and subsidy totals are given beneath each ship on membrane 1 and then beside each shipment on membranes 2 and 3 (however the spaces for the sums are left blank on membrane 3). Membranes 2 and 3 are written in a smaller and neater hand than membrane 1. The language is the usual mixture of Latin and English, but uses less English than does the roll of the controller for the same period (E122/62/6, no. 11 below). The Hansards are still trading under the confirmation of their privileges of March 1463 (see introduction to no. 8 above). Their cloths on the first ship are valued for poundage but the space for the subsidy due beside each shipment is left blank, and in the total beneath the ship, where the subsidy due is recorded, nil is noted beside it. The grant of £40 from their own customs and subsidies to the merchants of Hull is in force but no reference is made to it here (it appears in the next collectors' account, E122/62/7, no. 12 below). Most marginalia are the simple ones marking wine or Hansard trade. Their usefulness can be seen on membrane 3d where Nicholas Helperby's five tuns of wine, which have no marginal mark, are omitted from the running total. They were however included in the grand total. The account carelessly omits a ship name on membrane 2d, and the auditors picked up an extra four yards of cloth from the controller's roll on membrane 1. This entry seems to be the basis for Lister's mistaken note that the subsidy was recorded on the controller's roll (Lister, op. cit., p. 30). The controller's roll (no. 11 below) shows a few other minor discrepancies which were not noted by the auditors, probably because on investigation the collectors were found to be in the right, or the total values were still correct. These discrepancies have been noted in the text. A number of contemporary additions have been made in darker ink, notably in the heading and to the title of the first ship. They add little to the content and seem designed to bring the account closer to the usual format.

11. The book of Thomas Blount, controller, from Michaelmas 1464 to 18 March 1465

This is the corresponding control to E122/62/5 (no. 10 above). Although it is called a book it is a roll of three membranes, sewn as usual Exchequer style. The membranes are respectively 25.8, 26.4, and 26.7 cm wide and 57.9, 58.5, and 44 cm long. There is slight damage and two holes at the end of membrane 2.

In the account's heading 18 March has been written above Easter, the latter being crossed through. There are minor discrepancies with the collectors' roll, as noted in the introduction and footnotes to account no. 10 above. Other differences include the reversal of the order of the ships of Alard Garardson and Clement Hill in February, and certain choices of words: the 12 lib' seminarum aneut' of the collectors becomes the 1 dussan lib' anes sedes of Thomas Blount, who in all his accounts tends to use more English words than do the collectors.

Most marginalia are simple paragraph marks for the beginnings of new ships. When Dey's period of office as sole collector ends and he and Bussell take over the side-heading Tempore Johannis Dey et Rogerii Bussell customariorum ibidem appears. Examinantur cum libro customariorum appears at the end of membrane 3d.

12. Particulars of account of John Dey and John Brydde, collectors, from 18 March to Michaelmas 1465 (including Scarborough and Grimsby)

These seven membranes, which are still contained in their original soft white leather pouch, when taken with E122/62/5 (no. 10 above) provide accounts covering a full year. Both Grimsby and Scarborough were open ports and are accounted for in this half of the year. Presumably there was not enough trade expected for them to be worth opening before Easter. The membrane sizes are respectively 25.5, 23.2, 25.4, 26, 28.6, 27.3, and 26.9 cm wide and 51.3, 57.2, 51.2, 23.7, 55.4, 48.5, and 51.5 cm long. Membrane 1 has a letter (23.5 cm wide and 12.3 cm long) sewn to it which is from the Hanse Gildhall in London certifying which German merchants are members of their society, a letter similar to that with E122/62/4 (no. 8 above) and printed at the end of this account.

The customs and subsidies due are given at the end of each ship, and an informal running total is given on the left at the end of each membrane dorse. An unusual point is the running total of wine imports recorded in Arabic figures in the right hand margin, and an Arabic marginal total given for one of the wool ships.

Privileged groups still include the Hansards, and the Hull burgesses with their grant of £40 from their own customs and subsidies. The wool account with nil per breve noted after the totals of custom and subsidy, shows the Staple merchants retaining their customs and subsidies according to their grant of 24 March 1465, which allowed this to a total of £13,741.13.4 (C.C.R. 1461–8, p. 281; C.P.R. 1461–7, p. 438) The language shows more use of English (heare, eelys, onyons, heryng, floaretyles, fruyte) yet retains Latin for most bulk goods (vinum, oleum) The variability of linguistic usage is seen in the use of both ferrum and iren and occasional grammatical slips are made with pro . . . pecias or pro . . . zonas. Numbers are spelt out for the sarplers on the wool account.

Marginalia are mostly made to draw attention to commodities and nationalities. They include a dot beside the name of each certificated Hansard as in E122/62/4 (no. 8 above) and breve beside the names of Hull burgesses exporting. Lister extracted the details of cloth exports from this account as for E122/62/5.

[Membrane 1A: attached to dorse of membrane 1 at the first entry of a Hansard ship. A letter from the London Hanse certifying the names of the members of their London Gildhall. Punctuation has been added.]

Universis et singulis presentes litteras nostras inspecturis et specialiter custumariis domini regis in portu ville de Kyngeston super Hull amicis nostris tamquam carissimis, nos aldermannus et communes mercatores regni Alemanie habentes domum in civitate London que Gildhalla Theutonicorum vulgariter nuncupatur post debite salutacionis exhibicionem cupimus innotesci Mychael Kykebusch, Jeremyas van Rode, Johannes Wirse, Johannes Hegemann, Henricus Nederhoff, Henricus Schroder, Martinus Guntar, Jacobus Ebbynck, Eller Bockelman, Tydemannus Valant, Simon Lunynck, Nicholaus Fasolt, Everhardus Hesselman, Petrus Stubbolouwe, Jost Wentzell, Petrus Carpenter, Bartholomeus Sundeman, Rorgerus

[sic] Vinger, Jacobus Leppell, Henricus Scharff, Hermannus Vos, Nicolaus Culmener, Johannes Volmer, Nicolaus Molner, Ambrosius Staell, et Albertus Giise, (et Jacobus Duncker: interlined) mercatores et naucleri dicti regni Alemanie existunt de dicta domo Guldehalle Theutonicorum absque dolo vel fraude. In cuius rei testimonium sigillum secretum nostrum hinc cedule ferimus apponi in anno domini 1466, 19 die mensis Februarii.

[No seal remains.]

13. Roll of Thomas Blount, controller, from 18 March to Michaelmas 1465 (including Scarborough and Grimsby)

E122/62/8

The six membranes, sewn as usual Exchequer style, are rather worn and damaged. Their sizes are respectively 26.5, 26.3, 26.4, 26.0, 26.2, and 23.6 cm wide and 54.0, 56.5, 44.2, 56.8, 36.5, and 32.0 cm long. They tally in order and amount with the collectors' roll E122/62/7 (no. 12 above) but have considerable variations in spellings as they are much more anglicized. In ship headings day is regularly used instead of die: Navis Roberti Spoffourthe vocata Mary Flourr de Houll applicuit 26 day Apperyll anno predicto. Haryn, pyke and tarre, cofforys, and vithe leder teuyde appear.

The language and handwriting are clearly different from Blount's other three surviving accounts (62/1, 4, 6), but even those did not always use the same form. This account clearly suggests that Blount was using a deputy although the terms of the controller's appointment stated clearly enough that he must keep his accounts in his own hand. Controllers might be licensed to use a deputy if they were serving the king in some other capacity, but no such licence for Blount has been found so far.

Marginalia are simple paragraph marks except for a pointing finger and md (memorandum) beside the ship of John Person, the Maryknyght of Sellice on membrane 3. There is no marginal mark in the corresponding collectors' roll.

Membrane 6 records examinatur cum rotulis Johannis Deye et Johannis Brydde collectorum ibidem.

14. Particulars of account of John Dey and Robert Percy, collectors, from Michaelmas 1466 to Michaelmas 1467 (including Scarborough)

E122/62/9

The seven membranes are sewn Exchequer style and include separately headed membranes for Scarborough and for wool exports. The sizes are respectively 26.3, 26.8, 26.3, 26.5, 26.0, 26.5, and 26.1 cm wide and 69.3, 31.7, 73.2, 70.4, 78.0, 78.0, and 85.3 cm long. Membrane 1 is badly spotted, and membrane 7 is worn and damaged for the last 20 cm. It is however mostly legible under ultra-violet light and the few missing amounts can be supplied from the controller's roll, E122/62/10 (no. 15 below). The account is written in three distinct hands: a small neat one on membrane 1 and part of membrane 2; a loose cursive hand on the rest of membrane 2 and membranes 3 and 4; and a large angular hand on membranes 5 to 7. Customs and subsidy totals are recorded after each ship and a running total is kept at the end of each membrane dorse. The language is the usual mixture of Latin and English, with a slight leaning towards Latin: duodena, lastum and bundellus are used more frequently and fully extended. The privileged groups are the same ones as in the previous account, E122/62/7 (no. 12 above). Again Hansard goods are valued as if for subsidy but nil is recorded beside the final valuation in the total. Similarly calculations of the custom and subsidy due on the Staplers' wool are followed by nil per breve. Breve in the marginalia marks the Hull burgesses' exports. A few more unusual marginalia of asterisks and remarks by individuals' names have been noted. Ink dots appear over many totals of the valuations and duties charged and were probably made by the auditors as they checked and agreed the figures. Towards the end of the first ship entry some of the numbers are fully spelt out.

15. Roll of Thomas Radecliff, controller, from Michaelmas 1466 to Michaelmas 1467 (including Scarborough)

The seven membranes, sewn head to head Exchequer style, tally in order and amounts with the collectors' account, E122/62/9 (no. 14 above) and have few variations even in spelling. In size they are respectively 26.7, 26.4, 27.0, 27.0, 27.4, 26.2, 26.3 cm wide and 70.4, 32.2, 83.8, 36.6, 80.4, 73.7, and 74.0 cm long. The hand is small and cursive but clear. There are no marginalia except for a sum of money written and then erased alongside the ship of John Rede which left Hull on 10 November. At the end of membrane 7d there is recorded Hos 6 (sic) rotulos liberavit hic Thomas Radclyff contrarotulator 16 die Novembris anno 7 in propria persona sua et prestitit sacramentum, and also examinantur cum rotulis Johannis Dey et Roberti Percy collectorum ibidem.

16. Roll of William Stavelay, controller, from 18 July to Michaelmas 1468 (including Scarborough)

The two membranes, sewn Exchequer style, measure respectively 26.4 and 26.5 cm wide and 60.2 and 34.8 cm long. The altered date might seem superficially to lead to confusion but the date on membrane 2, the note in the enrolled account (E356/21 m. 17d) that Thomas Radecliff and William Staveley served separately and consecutively, and the date of Stavelay's appointment (see appendix A below) all make it clear that 18 July to Michaelmas 1468 is the correct period.

No customs and subsidies due are recorded as this is a controller's account. The privileges of the Hansards and Hull burgesses continue although those of the Hansards are soon to end temporarily with the beginning of the Anglo-Hanseatic war. Spanish merchants are trading as if denizens under the terms of the Anglo-Castilian treaty of 1466 and Stavelay simply describes the merchants on the Seynt Mare de Kettewe as denizens. There is equally no special reference to them in the corresponding enrolled account where their totals are simply included in denizen totals. This is unusual since most officials took care to describe merchants accurately and record why the privileged were not paying the full rates.

The language is unexceptional and somewhat ungrammatical with phrases like pro dimidium and pro . . . cistas appearing. There are very few marginalia. The dorse of membrane 1 is somewhat rubbed. The membranes are in their original soft white leather pouch, which is labelled in a contemporary hand Particule compoti Johannis Dey et Johannis Birde collectorum custumarum [et subsidiorum] domini regis in portu ville de Kyngeston super Hull et [in singulis portubus] et locis eidem

17. Particulars of account of Thomas Tone and Alice, widow of John Dey, collectors, from 17 November 1469 to 9 August 1470

The three membranes, sewn Exchequer style, are still in a soft, white leather pouch from which the original labelling has worn off. They measure respectively 27.0, 27.0 and 26.5 cm wide and 69.5, 68.4 and 75.2 cm long, and are a little stained and damaged, especially on membrane 1, although most of the content is legible under ultra-violet light.

The commercial year was clearly a bad one for Hull with no arrivals recorded after 4 April and no departures after 20 June. The enrolled account shows that the auditors accepted this as the full account so no membranes have been lost. There is no accusation of negligence or fraud against the collectors, although in the difficult summer months it is always possible that ships may have sailed without the knowledge of the collectors. It is most likely however that the account does fairly reflect the great upset to trade that year, with both the Anglo-Hanseatic war and the threat of invasion from the south, which led to the mobilisation of ships for the navy. Customs and subsidy totals are given after each ship, with a running total at the end of each membrane. Hansard privileges were suspended during the war, except in the case of merchants of Cologne, but none of the latter appear at Hull. The Hull burgesses continued to enjoy their customs privileges on the export of lead, although not on cloth exports. The language used is the normal mixture of Latin and English, with perhaps an increasing tendency to show English endings (pokes, pokettes). The marginalia are also the usual ones for goods taxed by the piece and for nationalities, Hull burgesses' exports again being marked by a marginal breve.

Alice, as her husband's executrix, accounted not only for this period but also for 5 November 1470 to 5 February 1471 when Dey held office with John Tonge. Thomas Tone and John Tonge had held office together for the intervening period, 9 August to 5 November 1470, as is shown on the enrolled account. No controller is recorded for Hull in the enrolled accounts between Michaelmas 1469 and 18 June 1471, despite the reference to Fereby here, and despite the appointment on 30 October 1470 of Richard Knight who seems never to have served (see Appendix A below).

18. Particulars of account of John Tonge and Thomas Tone, collectors, from 5 February to 18 June 1471

These three membranes, measuring respectively 26.2, 26.3 and 25.0 cm wide and 70.7, 66.5 and 65.0 cm long, and sewn Exchequer-style, show no unusual features. Slight damage to membrane 2 does not affect the content.

Customs and subsidy totals are given after each ship, in darker ink, with running totals at the end of each membrane. The language is the usual mixture of Latin and English. The privileges of the Hull burgesses and of the Staplers continued. There were few Hansards as the Anglo-Hanseatic war was at its height; the Hansard shipper on the Jacob of Antwerp was no doubt from Cologne. The marginalia are mostly the usual ones marking commodities and nationalities, but on membrane 3 the auditors' checking is reflected in the amounts expressed as on the exchequer board (eg. ... ∴). Richard Knight was appointed controller on 30 October 1470, but this account and the enrolled account make it clear that he did not serve. Hull was without an active controller from Michaelmas 1469 to 18 June 1471 when Nicholas Leventhorp took over (see Appendix A below).

19. Particulars of account of William Swelyngton and Thomas Alcok, collectors, from 18 June to Michaelmas 1471 (including Scarborough)

The two membranes, sewn Exchequer style, measure respectively 25.7 and 25.2 cm wide and 74.0 and 70.5 cm long. They are rather rubbed and faded, especially membrane 1d, but illegible entries have been supplied from the controller's roll, E122/62/15 (no. 20 below). The account shows no unusual features. Customs and subsidy totals are given after each ship and a running total at the end of each membrane. The language is the usual mixture of Latin and English. The privileges continue as on the previous account. The marginalia are the usual 'eyecatching' ones. There is no note that the account had been examined alongside the controller's account although this clearly has been done as the controller's account has a note to that effect.

20. Book of Nicholas Leventhorpp, controller, from 18 June to Michaelmas 1471 (including Scarborough)

Although called a book this is the usual roll, sewn Exchequer style, of two membranes, measuring respectively 27.8 and 24.9 cm wide and 75.0 and 64.4 cm long. The membranes are in worse condition than those of the collectors' roll, E122/62/14 (no. 19 above), being badly spotted and stained, especially on membrane 1, the last 15 cm of which is severely damaged.

Membrane 2 records examinatur cum rotulis Willelmi Swelyngton et Thome Alcock customariorum ibidem, but the auditors make no note of the omission by Leventhorp of the ship of Michael Johnson on 16 August which is included in the collectors' account. The roll is endorsed Hos duos rotulos liberavit hic Nicholaus Leventhorp contrarotulator customarum et subsidiorum in portu ville de Kyngeston super Hull 28 die Januarii anno 11 regis Edwardi III et prestitit sacramentum etc'.

21. Book of Nicholas Leventhorpp, controller, from Michaelmas 1471 to Michaelmas 1472

The seven membranes, sewn Exchequer style, measure respectively 25.6, 28.5, 27.7, 27.7, 28.3, 28.7 and 27.8 cm wide and 84.0, 79.6, 78.3, 76.5, 48.3, 74.5, and 77.3 cm long. The contents tally in order and amount with the collectors' account, E122/62/17 (no. 22 below). The single membrane for Scarborough, now classified as 62/18 (no. 23 below) is clearly its detached final membrane as it too tallies with 62/17 and carries the note of examination, and the delivery date. The account is not unusual; its language is close to that of the collectors' account except for very minor spelling variants, and there are few marginalia.

22. Particulars of account of Thomas Alcok and William Swelyngton, collectors, from Michaelmas 1471 to Michaelmas 1472 (including Scarborough)

The nine membranes, sewn Exchequer style, head to head, are well preserved and clear. They measure respectively 26.5, 26.8, 26.0, 25.9, 25.8, 26.4, 26.6, 26.0 and 26.5 cm wide and 67.1, 67.7, 67.7, 66.8, 67.8, 65.6, 67.0, 65.5 and 64.1 cm long. The customs and subsidy totals are given at the end of each membrane face and dorse but not after either ship or shipment. The account is not unusual in form or language. The privileges of the Hull burgesses continued to be recorded against exports other than cloth; the Staplers' new grant enabled them to keep one half of their customs and subsidies; no Hansards were recorded this year, which is one at the height of the Anglo-Hanseatic war. Marginalia are the usual ones highlighting nationalities and commodities.

The corrections to the final total are entirely due to the change in assessments for Rhenish wine in membranes 4 and 5. The wine was at first valued for petty custom and poundage, but then converted to hogsheads and pipes and charged tunnage. The Crown lost 8s. 4d. of duty by this conversion.

23. Detached final membrane of the book of Nicholas Leventhorpp, controller, from Michaelmas 1471 to Michaelmas 1472 (Scarborough only)

Headed Scarburgh pro tempore predicto this is clearly the final membrane of E122/62/16 (no. 21 above). It tallies exactly with the Scarborough account on the collectors' account, E122/62/17 (no. 22 above) and its delivery note on the dorse confirms that it is the eighth membrane of Leventhorpp's account: hos 8 rotulos liberavit hic Nicholaus Lewenthorp contrarotulator etc' 18 die Novembris anno 12 Edwardi III per manus proprias et prestitit sacramentum etc'. At the end of the membrane face is recorded examinantur cum rotulis Thome Alcok et Willelmi Swelyngton collectorum regis ibidem.

The membrane measures 26.5 cm wide by 45.1 cm long.

24. Particulars of account of Edmund Talbot and Robert Marler, collectors, from 6 August to Michaelmas 1473 (including Scarborough)

E122/62/19

The three membranes, sewn Exchequer style, measure respectively 28.0, 27.3 and 26.3 cm wide and 56.5, 78.0 and 77.4 cm long. The account is not unusual in form. Customs and subsidies due are given at the end of each ship and running totals appear at the end of each membrane face and dorse. The language is the usual mixture of Latin and English. The Hansards are still absent, and the Staplers continue to enjoy their privileges as in E122/62/17. The Hull burgesses' privileges are still valid but do not appear in this account, because, as the enrolled account makes clear (E356/22 m.25d), they had already overrun their grant of £40 with receipts of £42.9.2 before 6 August. New privileges were granted to the citizens of Veere from 22 December 1471 allowing them to trade on the same terms as Hansards (C.C.R. 1468–76, no. 865) and the marginalia now include references to the trade of merchants of Veere.

25. Book of Nicholas Leventhorp, controller, from 6 August to Michaelmas 1473 (including Scarborough)

Although called a liber this is again a roll of three membranes, sewn Exchequer style and measuring respectively 27.2, 27.4 and 26.5 cm wide and 70.2, 17.2 and 77.1 cm long. They tally in order and amount with the corresponding collectors' account, E122/62/19 (no. 24 above) but make clear that the Mary of Kinghorn, which is the last entry on both 62/19 and 62/20 sailed into Scarborough. The account is unexceptional in form and shows a few minor spelling variations from 62/19. There are no marginalia and no record of the date on which the roll was handed to the Exchequer. Membrane 3 notes examinatur cum rotulis Edmundi Talbot et Roberti Marler collectorum ibidem.

There is a little damage to the left side and some small holes in the text in the final 25 cm of membrane 3.

26. Particulars of account of Edmund Talbot and John Forster, collectors, from 9 April to Michaelmas 1483 (including Scarborough)

E122/63/1

The two membranes, measuring 27.2 cm wide by 90.4 cm long and 27.4 cm wide by 77.0 cm long respectively, and sewn Exchequer style, illustrate the administrative difficulties in the changes of dating style after Edward IV's death. The starting date of the head of the account, 9 April 1 Richard III, would be taken by modern usage as 9 April 1484 but the marginalia make it clear that the period begins at 9 April 1483, at the death of Edward IV. The collectors have publicly accepted Richard III's claim to be the legitimate heir of his brother. The auditors on the enrolled account are more expansive. They record the period 9 April to 22 May as anno 1 Edwardi Bastardi per usurpacionem nuper regis Anglie quinti and that the collectors' authority for this period was based on the mandate of the Lord Treasurer. They then record that Talbot alone accounted for 22 May to 23 July, at first under letters patent of Edward V of 22 May, but again under the Treasurer's mandate from 26 June, the day that Richard III 'very and undoubted king' took over the realm from Edwardo Bastardo nuper dicto Edwardo rege Anglie quinto regiam dignitatem eiusdem et potestatem in regno Anglie per usurpacionem et absque iusto titulo exerceente. From 23 July Talbot and Forster acted by virtue of letters patent of Richard III. The marginalia in this account note beside each ship the authority by which the collectors acted, although not quite accurately. Dates to 22 May are recorded as per mandatum; dates from then right through to mid-July are given as tempore Edwardi V despite Richard's taking over on 26 June; dates from the end of July are recorded as tempore regis Ricardi.

The account does not record tunnage and poundage, which had ceased at Edward IV's death and had not yet been re-granted by Parliament. It therefore much under-records English merchants' trade, especially inwards. Customs due are listed after each shipment and a running total is given both for each ship and on each membrane, face and dorse. The language is the usual mixture of Latin and English but with a slightly greater leaning towards English, and some agreements are made between Latin adjectives and English nouns (pro parvis mastes, pro 1 parva countoure). There is no Latinisation of, nor any abbreviation after the name Michael throughout. A few numbers are spelt out and the same figures are also spelt out in the controller's account, probably because the officials made up their accounts from the same files of cockets.

The Hansards and the citizens of Veere retained their privileges from Edward IV's reign but since tunnage and poundage was not charged they benefited much less than usual from these. The Hansards in fact paid nothing at all as the Anglo-Hanseatic treaty of 1474 not only re-confirmed their privileges but allowed them to keep £10,000 from the customs on their own goods in compensation for piracy and damage to them by the English. Marginalia are frequent, but apart from the dating details noted above these are the usual ones pointing to commodities and nationalities. It might be noted that Bartholomew Pierworth, importing to Hull on 10 July, and Johannes Petri, importing to Scarborough on the same day, are described in the main account and margins both as merchants of Veere and aliens, possibly the latter because they were acting as agents for merchants who were not citizens of Veere.

27. Book of Nicholas Leventhorp, controller, from 9 April to Michaelmas 1483 (including Scarborough)

This is the controlment corresponding to E122/63/1 (no. 26 above) and the remarks on dating in the introduction to that account apply also to this account. The delivery of this roll to the Exchequer on 12 February 1484 further confirms the dating.

Although called a book, this is again a usual roll of two membranes sewn Exchequer style, head to head, the two membranes measuring 27.0 cm wide by 71.0 cm long and 27.0 cm wide by 55.3 cm long respectively. It has a few minor spelling variations from the collectors' account. Damage to the right side does not affect the text. At the end of membrane 2d is recorded hos duos rotulos liberavit hic prefatus contrarotulator per manus suas proprias 12 die Februarii anno primo regis Ricardi tercii and also Iste due rotule Nicholai Leventhorp contrarotulatoris custumarum et subsidiorum regis in portu predicto examinantur per auditores cum duobus rotulis Edmundi Talbot et Johannis Fester [sic] collectorum eorundem per idem tempus.

28. Book of William Crauser, controller, from Michaelmas 1489 to Michaelmas 1490 (including Scarborough)

The five membranes, although called a book on membrane 2, form the usual roll, sewn Exchequer style, head to head. They measure respectively 30.0, 28.0, 29.8, 27.4, and 29.9 cm wide and 75.0, 84.2, 87.8, 39.0 and 78.8 cm long. The membranes are in poor condition, faded, stained, and damaged on the lower left side of membranes 1 to 3 and 5. They appear to be out of their original order now, the most logical order being membranes 2, 3, 1, 4, 5. Membrane 2 has the fullest title and begins at Michaelmas 1489 with arrivals at Hull and its outports up to Easter 1490; it then lists departures for the same period, which continue through to Easter on membrane 3. This membrane then continues with departures after Easter. Membrane 1 has a shorter title and records arrivals after Easter and then turns to record separately Hansard arrivals (all also after Easter). Membrane 4 contains Hansard departures after Easter. Membrane 5 records wool exports. The membranes are printed here however in their present archival order. Movements in the summer months, apart from the Hansard and Icelandic voyages seem oddly low, but no membranes are missing as the enrolled totals correspond with this account.

As this is a controller's account no duties are recorded. The language is the usual mixture of Latin and English, with a slightly greater leaning towards English, like that to be found in a number of controller's rolls. The entries for herring are unusual in being clearly pro . . . last' allecis albis instead of the usual allecis albi. The abbreviations for wool are particularly short, although not uniquely so (a similar but not identical form was printed from the accounts for 1462-3 for London by Gras (Customs System, pp. 602-5). The Hansards still held their privileges and the Staplers had made new arrangements through the statute of 9 November, 3 Henry VII; but Henry did not confirm any of the other Yorkist grants on the customs and had just cut off the Spaniards' privileges with the treaty of Medina del Campo. The account has few marginalia, but one on membrane 2d notes that the collectors gave a different date for the departure of the Trinite of Hull, thus indicating that the roll had been examined by the auditors. However no note of such an examination is recorded at the end of the account.

[The wool on the following six ships is recorded in the form Johannes Chapman ss vij. s v. ss iij^{cl'}. ss iij. etc. A comparison of these totals and those on the enrolled accounts makes clear that s and ss mean one and two sacks, the next number is of stones, and the superscript cl' indicates one clove. Each entry is the weight of one sarpler. (I thank Mr T. H. Lloyd for drawing my attention to this point.)]

- Notes to Table 1.
1. Most enrolled accounts run Michaelmas to Michaelmas with occasional minor variations into October or early November. The major exception is in 1457-61 when the accounts run as follows: Michaelmas 1457 - 31 Dec. 1458; 31 Dec. 1458 - 1 Jan. 1460; 1 Jan. - 12 Aug. 1460; no account 12 Aug. 1460 - 11 Apr. 1461; 11 Apr. - Michaelmas 1461. Other exact dates may be found in Carus-Wilson and Coleman, op. cit., pp. 97-111.
 2. To obtain a figure for total trade all available values have been included whether the goods actually paid duty or were exempt. The totals still considerably undervalue the trade, especially in the case of poundage, where exemptions, particularly of Hansard trade are noted but not often valued. For details see Tables 2 and 3.
 3. Paid on all alien miscellaneous goods both Hansard and non-Hansard, both in and out of Hull.
 4. Paid on all alien miscellaneous goods (except Hansard) imported and exported; also paid on denizen miscellaneous goods imported and exported and on the value of alien (non-Hansard) cloth exported. There are no figures for 1458-9 (nor of tunnage) as Anson collected these separately (see Appendix A). The figures for 1482-3 cover only Michaelmas 1482 to the death of Edward IV in April 1483.

- Notes to Table 2.
1. Paid on all alien goods including Hansard, in and out. The total given is that on which the duty was charged and does not include the exemptions.
 2. The value of Hansard trade is often included in the general alien total without special reference since all paid the same rate. An indication of the size of Hansard trade in those years can be found in their exemptions from subsidy where values are occasionally specified (see Table 3). For a time after the Anglo-Hansard war Hansard trade was separately recorded but slipped back into the general total again by the end of the century. In 1494-5 special mention was made of £186 of goods belonging to named Hansards, presumably not members of the Steelyard.
 3. When Veere merchants were privileged to trade on Hanseatic terms their trade was still often included in the general alien total without special reference.
 4. Westenschouen trade was treated as that of Veere.
 5. Exemptions were rare. The Spaniards were exempt 1466-89 under the terms of the Anglo-Castilian treaty (the values for 1473-5 are drawn from the record of subsidy exemptions).
 6. Jaquette Auber was exempt from custom and subsidy to the amount of £40 on his own goods in repayment of a loan of that sum to Richard III (E368/259, Status et Visus Compotorum, Hill., m.4).

- Notes to Table 3.
- 1. Paid by all merchants except Hansards on goods in and out. Alien cloth was also valued and charged poundage. The total given is the value of goods which were actually charged. To estimate the value of the total trade all exemptions must be included but this is often impossible as Hansard exemptions are rarely specified.
 - 2. Hull privileges for this period were allowed only on their miscellaneous exports.
 - 3. Hansards were trading in other years, as the petty custom table shows, but no valuation of their goods for poundage exemption is given.
 - 4. Veere's trade is not always listed separately during the period of the merchants' privileges. The + sign indicates that the value is only of cloth exempted; the size of Veere's other miscellaneous trade is shown in the petty custom table.
 - 5. Includes £766.8.0 of Spaniards' trade.
 - 6. Includes £142.16.8 of Spaniards' trade.
 - 7. Richard Yorke.
 - 8. Yevan Dautech of Brittany.
 - 9. Jacqueline Auber of Roien; see Table 2 note 6.
 - 10. Of a named group, probably not members of the Steelyard.

1. P.R.O. E356/20-24. These are the dates at which the officials become responsible to the Exchequer. Letters of appointment (in C.F.R., C.P.R.) are normally somewhat earlier but occasionally seem to be retrospective.

2. Tunnage and poundage granted to the Earl of Warwick for sea-keeping for three years from Michaelmas 1457 was collected and accounted for separately by his nominee, Richard Anson, from Easter 1458 to 1 Jan 1460. Anson died at the battle of Wakefield, 30 Dec 1460, and from 1 Jan to 12 Aug 1460 the subsidies were collected by the normal collectors and paid to Warwick: E356/20, m.24d.

3. Noted as being without the control of Moygne from 1 Jan to 12 Aug 1460; ibid.

4. John Dey collected tunnage and poundage separately from 16 Aug 1462 to 10 Mar 1463, possibly for Warwick: see E122/62/3 (no. 7 above) m.2d.

5. Blount was first appointed 31 July 1460 and re-appointed 7 Mar 1461: C.P.R. 1453-61, p. 590; ibid. 1461-7, p. 12.

6. Dey accounted alone for these 48 days: E356/21 m.16d.

7. Dey's letters of appointment of 15 Feb 1466 and 24 Mar 1467 note that he was the nominee of the Earl of Warwick who had a grant from the customs and subsidies of Hull while he was Captain of Carlisle and Warden of the West Marches: C.F.R. 1461-71, pp. 146-8, 197-8; C.P.R. 1461-7, p. 422.

8. 'Separately and successively' on the enrolled account: E356/21 m.17d.

9. 49 days ‘without control’ on the enrolled account: ibid. m.18.

10. Alicia Dey, his widow, accounted for this period after his death: ibid. m.18d.

11. Half a year and 83 days ‘without control’: ibid. m.18d. John Fereby had been appointed on 9 Nov 1469 but died soon after and his name is struck through on the particular account (no. 17 above): C.P.R.1467–77, p. 167; Test. Ebor., III, no. 43.

12. 88 days ‘without control’ on the enrolled account: ibid. m.18d.

13. Alicia Dey, his widow, accounted for this period after his death: ibid.

14. A quarter year and 1 day ‘without control’ on the enrolled account: ibid. Robert Knyght was appointed on 30 Oct 1470 but did not serve and his name is struck through on the particular account (no. 18 above): C.P.R.1467–77, p. 230.

15. A quarter year and 42 days ‘without control’: E356/22, m.25. For Robert Knyght’s appointment, see previous note.

16. Talbot accounted alone for these 5 days after Alcok’s death on 24 September: E356/22, m.28.

17. Talbot accounted alone for these 62 days: ibid. m.29.

18. The enrolled account makes no reference to controlment for 22 May to 26 June: ibid. Possibly a change of controller was planned as Robert Walker had letters of appointment on 24 May 1483 (C.P.R.1476–85, p. 352) but he clearly did not serve and Leventhorp took over again.

19. A quarter year and 23 days ‘without control’: E356/22, m.29d.

20. 38 days ‘without control’: E356/23, m.29.

21. One whole year and 294 days 'without control': E356/23 m.30. An attempt to obtain a controller was made with the appointment of John Page on 25 Feb 1489 but he clearly did not serve: C.P.R.1485-94, p. 269.

22. Crawsceter continued in office throughout the period 20 July 1489 to 15 April 1494, but there had been an attempt to replace the controller with the appointment of John Newton on 4 June 1492. He clearly did not serve and Crawsceter was re-appointed 28 June 1492: C.P.R.1485-94, p. 375.

23. Crouch accounted alone for 16 days after Johnson's death in office, 10 June 1498: E356/24, m.26.

GLOSSARIES

Words are given in their most usual form and main (but not all) variations and heavy abbreviations are noted in brackets. Latin words are given in the nominative singular. Apart from the major dictionaries and glossaries the following have been useful for some of the more unusual terms: Gras, Customs System, Appendix C; H. Hall and F. J. Nicholas (eds.), 'Select Tracts and Table Books relating to English Weights and Measures', Camden Miscellany XV, Camden Third Series, XLI (1929); B. Sandahl, Middle English Sea Terms, I and III (Uppsala, 1951, 1982); Statutes of the Realm, I-II, ed. A. Luders et al. (1810-16); E. M. Veale, The English Fur Trade in the Later Middle Ages (Oxford, 1966); T. S. Willan, A Tudor Book of Rates (Manchester, 1962).
